Reviews

Academic

[Cornell] The science department is very good, especially in the upper school. The English department focuses on writing well. Language department needs work. Haverford's theatre arts and art programs are very good.

[Yale] The English department and teachers are very good. Teachers are very well educated. The science department teachers are not as good—some are unfriendly and unwilling to invest extra time. The math department is weak, including the teachers. Very competitive academic atmosphere.

College Counseling

[Cornell] College is briefly discussed in sophomore year. In late junior year, each student begins meeting with one of the three or four college counselors. When senior year begins, the meetings intensify—once or twice a week. Very well connected and experienced.

[Yale] You begin discussing college admissions as early as you'd like. The mandatory process begins junior year. Haverford is a name that's recognized at most college admissions offices.

Admissions Process

[Yale] The SSATs are required. Athletic excellence can and will help, as do good grades. Interviews are not required, but good to do. Haverford has a shirt and tie dress code, so dress along those lines whenever having face to face contact with the school.

Extra-Curricular Activities

[Cornell] The coaching, facilities, and other athletic resources are great. Students can join any number of clubs.

[Yale] The art and music programs at Haverford are strong. Lacrosse, water polo and crew are strong sports; football is the weakest sport. Time management is difficult.

Quality of School Life

[Cornell] The faculty and staff are very friendly. The student body is small. There is a large influx of new students in freshman year, primarily athletic recruits.

[Yale] The food is not good. The gym includes a pool, squash and tennis courts, soccer and football fields, athletic track, wrestling room, basketball courts, rowing ERGs, weight room, etc. The Mainline is one of the safest places to be, crime-wise. For the most part, the student body, faculty and the school's surrounding neighborhood are all predominantly white, although in recent years Haverford's made commendable strides toward diversity.
